EVENT

HERC promotes a healthier lifestyle through the week

By Alyssa Ullrich
Staff Reporter

Kicking off Eastern’s first Health Week, the Health Education Resource Center hosted “The Great American Smoke Out” in the Library Quad on Monday.

Members of the HERC offered free hot dogs, drinks and resources on kicking the tobacco habit to students in attempts to promote the day created by the American Cancer Society 35 years ago.

Jimmy Friesema, a graduate student working toward a master’s in school counseling, headed the event under his title of Substance Abuse Coordinator for students at Eastern.

“This is a day for the whole community to come together and really promote the resources available to quit,” Friesema said. “Smoking definitely affects everyone, and I know it has affected many in my own family.”

Many handouts, including Quit Kits and “Smart Move: A Stop Smoking Guide,” were provided to inform students about resources available to quit, as well as the benefits of quitting.

Dawn Howe, a junior elementary education major, volunteered to help spread the word about the dangers of tobacco.

“We hope that students take a serious look at the resources we are providing,” said Howe. “We want them to realize how much damage each cigarette does to them.”

Smokers can be found in large percentages on many college campuses since many students use tobacco as an outlet to relieve stress.

Nicole Vergara, a senior family consumer science major, notices the large population of student smokers on campus.

CITY COUNCIL

Lakeview petition to be voted on

By Allison Twaits
City Editor

The City Council will vote to grant a petition for Lakeview College of Nursing for a variance.

The lot for the college does not meet street parking requirements; 62 spots are required for the space and only 55 are available.

This request comes to the council to approve or vote down after discussion.

City Mayor John Inyart said the things they will look at is the option for students to possibly walk to class and if the neighborhood is already overcrowded with parking.

The council will also discuss granting a petition for a conditional use permit to Majorie Beavers, owners of the commercial property.

The building is located at 1927 18th St. and was previously used for a daycare.

The property will be developed to add a second residential unit to the existing building.

The proposed use will reduce traffic congestion in the area and will not be an issue for public safety.

The council must come to an agreement to authorize Don Hance for architectural services to the building at 513 7th St.

The hance Design Group has agreed to provide services to the building while presenting the costs of repairs.

The supplemental appropriation of Motor Fuel Tax funds is in need of an official change of how the report is presented to the state.

No change to the budget itself is an issue.

The annual agreement for Charleston to select Coles County Regional Planning and Development Commission to provide certain technical assistance services to the city will be discussed.

From Dec. 1, 2010 to Nov. 30, 2011, $7,000 is to be billed on a monthly basis for the services.

A second annual agreement for the Revolving Loan Fund will also discussed.

Candlelight vigil to be held in support for Andrea Will

By Steve Puschmann
Staff Reporter

A candlelight vigil will be held in front of the Sigma Kappa sorority chapter house in Greek court at 6 p.m. today.

The event will be for former Eastern student Andrea Will, who was murdered in her freshman year in February 1998. The event is to raise awareness that her attacker was being released from prison after a 12-year sentence at the same time.

The February 4, 1998, edition of The Daily Eastern News reports on the murder in an article called “Freshman found murdered,” which lists what had taken place the night of the murder.

“An Eastern student Tuesday was taken into police custody for his alleged involvement in the strangulation death of freshman Andrea Will,” the article said. Justin Boula, 20, of St. Charles, was arrested and charged with murder with the intent to injure or kill, according to a police report.”

The article further stated that Boula called his parents after the murder took place. His parents, who sensed something was seriously wrong, drove to Charleston the same night.

Chillin’ in the quad for a cause

By Erica Whelan
Staff Reporter

As tension builds before the holiday break, student government is asking the campus to chill out at today’s “Chillin’ for Charity” fundraiser event in the South Quad.

Those interested are encouraged to kick back and relax from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. with Student Senate representatives who will be holding giveaways and collecting surveys aimed at understanding student body concerns.

Participants must pay a minimum fee of $50 to unwind in the November weather, where donations will go to support the Mattoon Area Public Action to Deliver Shelter (PADS). This nonprofit refuge is responsible for providing resources to the area homeless and hard-of-luck, including a safe place to sleep, access to showers and laundry facilities and two meals per day.

PADS is the only non-gender specific shelter in the area that serves an estimated 200 new people per year, and the number is growing, according to figures published by the 2007 U.S. Census Bureau, which stated that about 20 percent of the 51,011 residents of Coles County are living at or below the poverty line. Alex Boyd, sophomore and chair of the student affairs committee on the Student Senate, organized the event in the effort to make student government more visible to the campus community in a way that would also give back to the area.

He said the concept for the event reflects the idea behind Relay for Life, in which teammates seek sponsorship and take turns completing an active goal to raise money for a cause.

“It’s kind of like that, but for this, you don’t have to walk four miles, you just have to sit,” Boyd said. “Bring your homework, bring card games and come out.”

Students, professors learn better communication and teaching skills

By Kaylia Eskew
 Staff Reporter

“Everybody can be a better teacher, as teachers we need to not only learn from ourselves and our colleagues, but also from literature,” L. Dee Fink told Eastern professors and students on Monday.

L. Dee Fink, education consultant in higher education, presented his methods to improve communication and teaching in “The Joys and Responsibilities of Teaching Well,” a seminar that took place in the Doudna Fine Arts Center.

Among the many points Fink made about how to teach well, he stressed how important it is for a college professor to not only learn about their subjects, but to also learn how to be a better teacher.

Fink established the Instructional Development Program at the University of Oklahoma in 1979, according to the Individual Development and Educational Assessment Center.

He currently works as a national and international consultant on higher education.

Fink displayed a number of books that teach teachers how to teach, including his own “Creating Significant Learning Experiences.”

Fink said only 20 percent of college teachers have ever taken a class on how to design learning experiences.

“We are not doing our jobs sufficiently enough to be in the 21st century,” Fink said. “We are doing good things, but we need to do better.”

“(Fink) covered a lot about the value of professional development and about teachers being consciously aware of their teaching methods and how they can raise the bar. Eastern is a largely teaching institution so its important we focus on the students,” Blair Lord, vice president for academic affairs said.

Fink talked about how employers react to new college graduates.

From his research he said, “Overall employers say that the graduates cant read, write, work in groups, or work with people that are different from themselves very well, but besides that they are good.”

Two thirds of college graduates cannot read at the college level, according to a census from the Adult Literacy Association.

“The people who teach are critical. We are educating the people who have to work together after their higher education, and we need people who can come out of that higher education with the knowledge and how to use it,” Fink said.

Fink gave examples of how to become better teachers such as valuing their responsibilities, taking the time to learn about their subject and their students and different ways of teaching.

Bonnie Irwin, dean of the College of Arts and Humanities, said

“(Fink) made many good points about how the faculty need to spend time re-examining how they teach and what they can do differently to help the students. I will really look into my own teaching methods.”

Bonnie Irwin, dean of the College of Arts and Humanities

the presentation was very beneficial for Eastern professors in attendance.

“(Fink) made many good points about how the faculty need to spend time re-examining how they teach and what they can do differently to help the students,” she said. “I will really look into my own teaching methods.”

Another key idea Fink stressed is the idea of getting students actively involved in the learning process.

Fink created what he calls the Taxonomy of Significant Learning.

In this model, the key to getting students involved is to not only expose the students to the information, but to also give them a real-life experience and have them reflect on the information and assess what they are learning and how it will effect them.

It is also important for teachers to have students assess themselves, before the teacher does so, he said.

“When they get into the real world, we will not be the ones assessing them; they will. They need to know how to learn from self-assessment,” Fink said.

One concern from an audience member was if teachers should be held solely responsible or if it is also up to the students to become active in learning.

“If we teach right, the students will come to class. We have to make it worth their while,” Frank said.

Fink talked about how today everyone has multifaceted communication, which does make it harder to gain a students attention away from Facebook, cell phones and so forth.

While the seminar focused on college level teaching, Fink pointed out that the same ideas apply to teachers in kindergarten through 12th grade as long as they focus on what their students need at that point in their education process.

Matt Titus, a post-baccalaureate secondary education major, said the most important part of the presentation was when Fink said college educators need to be professionals.

“(They) need to realize that the students need their help and have to feel like their teachers care and want to help them,” Titus said.

Font change makes sense to save EIU
money

The Council of University Planning and Budget is looking into using Century Gothic as the universal campus font.

It’s a very simple, easy way for the university to save money quickly.

“I think it would be an excellent recommendation for our campus,” Amanda Bos, of the intercollegiate athletics department said in an article yesterday in The Daily Eastern News.

Bos said the font change could save the university thousands of dollars.

The Daily Eastern News editorial board agrees with the proposal and thinks the university should enact on it immediately. The university needs to find different ways to save money and changing the font on documents is a simple, effective idea.

Century Gothic is an extremely easy to read font with the only difference between traditional fonts is the letters are less thick.

According to gizmag.com, the University of Wisconsin - Green Bay (UWGB) has rolled out the change last semester, saying it uses 30 percent less ink than its default font Arial when printed.

Also according to the article, Century Gothic is apparently even more economical than a well-known “eco-font,” and when printer ink can cost $10,000 a gallon, it’s a great eco-friendly initiative that not only helps the planet but also saves money.

According to the Wisconsin-Green Bay website, ink accounts for about 60 percent of the cost of the printed page.

One of the criticisms of Century Gothic font is that because it is wider it does use more paper.

A document that would normally be only a page in length could get boosted to two pages.

Obviously using extra paper would offset the savings the school would by using less ink.

While this may be true, the university can easily combat this problem as well.

If the Century Gothic font is decreased from the standard 12 point font to 11 point font, it is basically the same size as Times New Roman.

The font is still easy to read at a 10 point size. Ten or 11 point font is just a little bit smaller than 12 and it is still easy to read.

In a time when the university is looking for extra money any way they can, something as little as the font can make a huge difference.

The change would easily save hundreds for a number of departments who can use the money on more important aspects of education.

The board can only hope the university switches over to this font as quickly as possible. It is as easy as switching the tag on Microsoft Word.

Selecting heroes and villains distorts history

Eastern’s Faculty Senate voted to rename Douglas Hall recently, on the conviction that Stephen A. Douglas does not exemplify our university’s values.

Douglas was a highly significant figure, deserving our thoughtful historical attention. That some of Douglas’s acts and words violate our values today is obvious.

He authored the Kansas-Nebraska Act, overturning a long-standing ban on slavery in those territories. He helped enact the Fugitive Slave Law that criminalized the work of the Underground Railroad. Most damning, Douglas was a white supremacist.

Equally obvious is that Douglas’s record is not on the unqualified evil. A complete reckoning of Douglas’s record would also acknowledge his legislative work that ended the slave trade in the District of Columbia; his support for the admission of California and Oregon as free states; his stand against the admission of Kansas as a slave state, for which antislavery men praised him; and his opposition to Southern slaveholders who seceded from the Union, precipitating civil war.

Like all figures from the past, Douglas presents a complex legacy. Certainly no historian would characterize Douglas as a monster to inhumanity. Nor was he proslavery, like those Southern slaveholders of his day.

He was, in the end, a product of his time.

As a historian, I admit to having a stake in the controversy. But my stake does not involve holding up Douglas’s praiseworthy accomplishments, as if they outweigh his ignoble ones.

Mark Hubbard
Associate professor of history

Respectively judging Douglas— which is what the Faculty Senate has done— is beside the point.

I discovered long ago that trying to find historical actors who fully abided my own moral judgments was a fruitless exercise. Fruitless because our world today is too different from the world occupied by predecessors who spoke and acted in the past.

Abraham Lincoln? Not only Lincoln unwilling to see blacks as his social and political equal, as president he worked to colonize blacks out of the country.

Martin Luther King, Jr.? The great voice of civil rights was a serial adulterer. Moreover, his cheating went beyond marital. King plagiarized substantial portions of his doctoral thesis.

The flaws of Lincoln and King are instructive. The past is never perfect, especially when the standard of perfection being applied is a present-day construct.

Yet despite their shortcomings, Eastern has buildings named for both of these men, and rightly so, I hasten to add.

The Ancient Greeks understood that heroes are stuff of myth. To their credit, they also understood that the best heroes present the full range of human qualities—good, bad and indifferent.

The project of history engages the past for quite different reasons. We study history to know ourselves, not to celebrate ourselves. Such a project necessarily entails knowing things about our past that reveal our imperfections as a people.

But the Faculty Senate’s decision amounts to history by selection: We don’t like this man, Douglas. Nevermind that he and Lincoln made history in their famous debates, one of which occurred right here in Charleston.

Let’s erase his name, and find a prettier hero who satisfies our own sensibilities or agendas.

Selecting heroes for veneration and villains for censure may make us feel good, but hardly advances historical thinking. Selecting heroes and villains distorts history. And when we distort our history, we distort ourselves.

Finding meaning after losing someone

Logan Short
Northern Star
Northern Illinois University

The night right before I moved into Grant South freshman year, I was sitting in my hotel room when I got a call from a friend back home.

Nervous about my transition into college, it was relieving to see a familiar name on my caller ID, but what he was about to tell me was far from relief. One of my friends from back home had committed suicide.

He had gone to junior high with me. As an intimidated sixth grader, he made me feel accepted when he, an eighth grader, was handing out pieces of gum to people on our soccer team and gave me a piece. “Here ya’ go, I guess you’re cool enough,” he jokingly said. As insignificant of a statement as it was, it stuck with me as my first memory of our friendship.

Now I was hearing that my friend, a nice and normal guy, was gone.

I didn’t know what to do; I wasn’t able to go home to the St. Louis area four hours away. I wasn’t able to talk to friends and try and make some sense out of this. It would not have mattered, though; it didn’t make any sense at all. Just like how only six months later, it wouldn’t make sense when a man would barge into Cole Hall and kill five fellow Huskies and then himself.

The same can be said about the recent Toni Keller case. It just does not make sense why these things happen, and that makes it so hard to cope with. Death is permanent; you cannot fix it. So what is there for one to do once it happens? How are you supposed to deal with all those feelings swelling up within you? Where do you direct them?

Growing up, you hear about these sorts of tragedies so much you almost become numb to them, but you also do not understand. If you are 4 years old and grandma dies, you might cry, but you do not really know why you’re sad. You do not have a concept of death.

That changes when you become an adult; you realize what that means. These things hit so close to home and everything seems so surreal after you hear the news.

Another friend of mine from back home was killed this past Monday.

Be it a small group of friends and family or an entire university, we must cope with the death of a fellow human being together.

Southern Illinois baseball coach Dan Callahan dead at 52

By the Associated Press

CARTERVILLE — University officials say Southern Illinois University head baseball coach Dan Callahan has died at his home in Carterville at the age of 52.

The 52-year-old Callahan died Monday after battling a rare form of skin cancer since 2006.

Callahan was a recent recipient of the Missouri Valley Conference Most Courageous Award. SIU athletic director Mario Moccia said the Springfield-born Callahan was the second-winningest coach in school history, with a record of 442 wins, 447 losses and one tie in 16 seasons.

Before joining SIU in 1994, Callahan spent five years as head coach at Eastern. The Quincy College graduate also coached high school baseball in Springfield after pitching in both the San Diego Padres and Seattle Mariners organizations.

Callahan is survived by his wife, Stacy, two daughters, and his parents.

Central Ill. man killed by fleeing burglars

By the Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON — A 48-year-old central Illinois man is dead after he interrupted a burglary and was run over by the fleeing suspects' truck.

Bloomington police tells The Pantagraph newspaper that Mark Olson died early Monday at a local hospital.

An autopsy said Olson, who lived in Normal, suffered severe head injuries.

Police said Olson appeared to be putting some items used at a charitable event away at a warehouse storage facility Sunday night when he interrupted a burglary.

The truck hit him and knocked him to the ground.

Around 5:05 a.m., Boula and his parents went to the Charleston police station about the murder. Will was pronounced dead by a Coles County Coroner at 5:18 a.m.

Pamela Faught, who was a good friend of Will's during their freshman year at Eastern, recalls the incident and how it unfolded.

"Andrea had been seeing Justin Boula for a couple of years before both of them came to Eastern in '98. Will broke it off with Boula during the fall semester," Faught said. "On the night the murder took place, Boula's friend called Will and told her that Boula had a birthday gift at his apartment, and that was the last time we saw Andrea alive," said Faught.

The event shocked many that were connected with Will because they did not believe anything like this was going to happen. Boula had shown signs of verbal aggression towards Will but had never physically assaulted her.

Faught was informed of Will's death the morning after it took place.

"What made it so hard was the fact that we were with her the same night right before she went to Boula's house," Faught said. "The next morning I had gotten up and was getting ready to go to class when I was informed in the hallway that Andrea had been killed. When I heard, I realized that Boula must have killed her. It was hard for all of us, and really changed a lot of us and how we thought of the world."

Boula was charged with first-degree murder and sentenced to 24 years in prison but was allowed parole after 12 years. Boula will be released today at 6 p.m.

Many who knew Will are unhappy about the release.

"We do not believe that he should be released because he deserves to spend more time in prison for the action he committed," Faught said. When it happened, it took a lot of time for many people to heal from what had happened and now with him being released, its like the wound is being opened again."

The event is also being used as a way to raise awareness to abusive relationships and help bring an end to it. There will be 26 other locations across the nation, which will also be holding a candlelight vigil in support of Andrea Will.

Faught is very pleased with the support she and others have been receiving for the event.

"We are so happy with the number of supporters that we have been gaining whether through Facebook or by the people planning to come out to the vigil," she said.

Cara Fumagalli a senior communications studies major, is part of the Sigma Kappa sorority and is one of the people responsible for scheduling the event.

"The vigil is the main thing that we have planned for Andrea as we want to show our support for Andrea, her family and any other people who were close to Andrea at the time of her death," said Fumagalli.

Faught would also like to thank the Sigma Kappa sorority house for the support they have shown even though most of the sister's did not know Andrea on a personal basis.

"A lot of students at Eastern smoke, so that gives us a big audience to reach out to," Vergara said.

Though HERC members were directing the event at those who smoke, they also worked to provide information for non-smokers looking to help a family member or friend quit.

After losing her grandfather to lung cancer, Brittany Meding, a first-year graduate student in the College of Student Affairs program, felt passionately about informing everyone on the dangers of tobacco.

"My whole family smokes, so I feel it is very important to spread prevention efforts to everyone, keeping in mind the importance of health," Meding said.

The American Cancer Society held its first Great American Smoke Out in 1977 to encourage smokers to quit for at least one day, in hopes to challenge them to quit permanently.

Brittany Meding, a first-year graduate student in the College of Student Affairs program

The ACS has created many resources to help an individual quit smoking, such as nicotine replacement products, stop-smoking groups, telephone smoking cessation hotlines and various guidebooks.

"We hope to relay to students that there are plenty of resources available to help," Friesema said, "and many of them are found here on our own campus and available through the HERC."

The ACS will hold their official Great American Smoke Out on Thursday, Nov. 18.

For more information on the dangers of tobacco and how to quit smoking, visit the HERC's website at www.eiu.edu/~herc.

Boyd encourages students to form teams of 10 to reduce the cost to $5 per person to participate and asks that groups bring the proper chilling supplies, like chairs and blankets.

Couches and tents will also be permitted at the effort, which Boyd said he expects to garner an interest from the student body.

If all goes well, he said he hopes to introduce the concept as an annual event at Eastern. Nine campus groups are already confirmed to take advantage of the chance to combine reclining and raising funds for PADS, and Boyd emphasizes that individuals and smaller teams are welcome, as well.

His committee will be distributing T-shirts to participants who donate to the PADS cause that reaffirm the message of the event: "Who said couch potatoes are useless?"

Erica Whelan can be reached at 581-7942 or elwhelan@eiu.edu.

A resolution approving the Collective Bargaining Agreement with International Union of Operation Engineers, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local Union and Charleston Fraternal Order of Police Lodge.

The agreement includes a two percent raise over the next three years.

Inyart will also bring to the council the re-appointment of several individuals to the Charleston Tree Commission.

No parking along Orchard Drive, Oxford Court and Summerfield Lane is also on the agenda.

The council will meet tomorrow at 7 p.m. in city hall.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL NOTEBOOK

Sallee thought team could win

Coach correct, as team beats Mizzou

By Alex McNamee
Sports Editor

Eastern head coach Brady Sallee thought the time was right for the Panthers to beat a team like Missouri, from the Big 12.

All of the Missouri players are basically freshmen, as they are all new to head coach Robin Pingeton's system, the first-year coach, Sallee said.

In the past, Sallee said Eastern has had Illinois come to Lantz Arena; however, he said the Eastern teams that played Illinois weren't ready to win the game.

"I thought this year we had a team that was ready," Sallee said.

Sallee said the win was a breakthrough for the program; however, he said he wants his team to think of this game less as an upset and more as a game they should beat.

Sallee said the Panthers' preseason schedule might have helped against Missouri.

The Panthers played Illinois and Loyola-Chicago in the preseason to prepare for this game.

"We weren't surprised by their size and athleticism," Sallee said.

Sallee said the Panthers were the hardest working team on the court Sunday.

VOLLEYBALL NOTEBOOK

Seniors play well in final weekend

Volleyball team disappointed by end result

By Brad Kupiec
Staff Reporter

The Eastern volleyball team's season has come to an end, as the Panthers will be missing out on the Ohio Valley Conference tournament by one spot. The Panthers finished the season tied with Tennessee State for seventh in the conference.

Season's end, the Panthers improved both over last year and as the season went along. The team only won three conference matches last year, compared to seven this season. They also lost five of their first six matches before reeling off a streak in which they went 6-4 in OVC matches and 7-4 overall.

In Friday's match against Tennessee Tech, senior outside hitter Alex Zwettler posted 16 kills and 11 digs for her 50th career double-double as a Panther. The 16 kills also lead all players on the court.

Fellow senior outside hitter Erin Hake trailed only Zwettler among all Panthers with 14 kills.

Senior middle blocker Jorie Dieter, who was honored earlier this year as the OVC Defensive Player of the Week, led all players on the court with five total blocks.

Junior libero Brittany Wallace tied for the lead with 12 digs.

Junior setter Chrissie Albers assisted on 36 of the 43 kills. Albers also posted three kills on four total attacks without an error for a .750 attack percentage.

The Panthers played in Jacksonville, Ala. in their final match of the season against Jacksonville State Saturday. The seniors shined again as Hake led all players on the court with 15 kills.

Senior outside hitter Kelsey Orr, who was sidelined with injuries in the middle of the season, was right behind Hake with 14 kills for the Panthers.

Zwettler posted nine putaways for Eastern on Saturday while digging 15 Gamecock attacks. She lead all players on the court in digs.

Albers had another big day on Saturday, as the setter assisted on 47 Panther kills against Jacksonville State.

Panthers need to rebound after poor start

The Eastern men's basketball team did not get off to an ideal start losing its first two games of the season.

The first loss was against South Dakota State, which the Panthers lost 67-55. The score probably should have been more lopsided but two late threes by senior guard Curry McKinney cut the score down by six.

The second loss was a complete blowout by Ball State. The Panthers were never closer than six points at any time in the game. The final score was 77-46. It was the most lopsided loss since Nov. 28, 2009 against Belmont.

There were many reasons why the Panthers did not perform well.

1. They committed a combined 34 turnovers in the games. A team cannot win if they turn the ball over that much. It doesn't matter if you have an extremely talented team, if the team turns the ball over on a consistent basis they will not win.

2. They shot terribly. Against SDSU, the Panthers shot 37 percent for the game and just 27 percent from three. They also shot only 57 percent from the free throw line. Against Ball State, they shot even worse – just 31 percent from the field.

Poor shooting can be a result of a number of factors. It's earlier in the season so the poor shooting could be rust from not playing in a competitive game for so long.

It could be a result of poor shot-selection. Taking bad shots leads to more misses. The players and coaches seem to think their poor shooting is because of their poor shot selection.
